

Ride to Salvation Army to donate personal care items
then on to Quacks Bakery (22 March 2014)

This has become an annual event. Every year we head to the Salvation Army to donate Personal care items we have collected from our stays in hotels. They are free just pick them Up every night and you get more. Of course we then have to have a quick ride after this

You cannot go to Quacks without standing in line, and it is well worth it. The pastries are very delightful, and of course no calories (well maybe a few). Quacks has a long history in Austin.

Quack's 43rd Street Bakery is the present incarnation of Captain Quackenbush's Intergalactic Dessert Company and Espresso Café which opened for business on the Drag, across the street from the University of Texas at Austin, back in 1983. Over the years, our long name was truncated by our patrons and consequently we've formally shortened it to Quack's.
